DR. HUGHES WON THEM

A NEW PASTOR IS WARMLY RE-CEIVED BY HIS FLOCK.

Successor of Dr. Quayle in the Pulpit of the Independence Avenue M. E. Church Makes an Unmistakable Hit.

Dr. Matthew S. Hughes met the members of his new congregation at the Independence Avenue Methodist church last night, and they are his. He made an unmistakable hit. From the moment the Flender, smooth-faced, spectacled young man stepped into the pulpit and began talk-

REV. DR. MATT S. HUGHES.

Ing in the quiet, magnetic way he has, his hearers were his friends.

The auditorium of the large church was well filled at the formal reception of the youthful pastor, who comes from Minneyouthful paster, who comes from Minne-apolis to succeed Dr. W. A. Quayle, now of the Meridian Street church, of Indianepolls. So much had been said and written recently of the eloquent young preacher that many were curious to see him, and hear him speak, so that when Dr. Hughes slender, beardless and boyish-looking, faced his audience he had the closest attention. There was no embarrassment in his manner. He began speaking in a scarcely audi-ble tone of voice, which, after the first sentence or two, rang out clear and distinct and was wonderfully modulated. He made

I am reminded of the preacher who reported at conference that his church was looking up. Noticing the look of incredulity on the faces about him he explained that it couldn't look any other way because it was flat on its back. I say it is easier to take a church of that kind than one that has waxed fat and may be ready one that has waxed fat and may be ready

"When you get a man," continued Dr. Hughes, referring again to Dr. Quayle. "with a big brain and a warm heart, shot through with genius, you've got a marvelous combination. And that's what you had. And I want to say that I will not grow tired of Quayle. I would feel a greatisel easier standing here now, in fact, if I had more of Quayle. But I'm not Quayle, I'm Hughes. I'm not at all like him. I am so diametrically opposite to him in every way, in fact, that you can hardly make any comparison between us. "Yet I am not afraid of thy congregation oving the old pastor too much. I look forward to the time when you will look upon me with something of the same feeling. I did not come here to take Dr. Quayle's place. As I have explained, that would not be possible. But brethren and sisters, I want a place of my own.

There was a laugh and Dr. Hughes said he had no intention of comparing Kansas City to medicine. Then he continued: "There's one thing I like about Kansas City. You're most awfully alive down here. Then you have a good opinion of yourselves. One of the things that attracted me to this place was the enormous nerve you had."

Dr. Hughes explained this statement.

Dr. Hughes explained this statement, which also brought a laugh, by saying that the church's committee would not accept his refusal of its offer to succeed Dr. Quayle, but wrote back declaring that the independence Avenue church wanted him and it usually got what it went out after. After speaking of what he expected his work in Kansas City to be. Dr. Hughes closed his remarks by thanking the congregation on behalf of himself and his wife, for the reception that had been given them. Music followed and then an informal reception, in which the members of the congregation were introduced to Di. Hughes.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 2.—The British steamship Marstonmoor, Captain Angus, which sailed from Baltimore November 25. for Rotterdam, arrived at the Delaware breakwater to-day, having in tow one of the richest prizes picked up at sea for some time. She towed in the British bark La Escocesa, which was bound from Iuquique to New York, laden with about 2,000 tons of nitrade of soda, valued at about $55,000. The prize was picked up twenty-four hours previously, to the eastward of Cape Henlopen. From Captain Angus it was learned that the bark when sighted was in charge of the chief officer. Captain Evans, her commander, had died of brain fever September 22. She was in a helpless condition, having experienced a heavy gale November 29.

AT THE HOTELS.

Dr. Stephen A. Northrop, pastor of the First Baptist church, welcomed Dr. Hughes in the name of the sister churches of the city. He admorished Dr. Hughes that he had a hard man to follow. "For the next six months." he said, "you will not have chicken for dinner and supperbut Quayle. Everywhere you go you will near nothing but Quayle, Quayle."

Dr. Hughes' Reply.

When Dr. Hughes arose to respond to the welcome he said:

"The sensation of such an hour as this can only be appreciated by some one who has stood in my place. I am looking out into the faces of those who, for the most part, are strangers and yet into the faces of those who, for the most part, are strangers and yet into the faces of those among whom I expect to live for at least one year of coming time. And I falink I know how you feel. You are looking forward with a great deal of curiosity to the work of the man who is to take the place of your beloved postor, Dr. Quayle. And I confess that, as I stand here, I do feel somewhat of an intruder. But I am not in this place of my own motion, I am here at your hidding and at your request.

BOOK OF LAW FOUND

DR. GILBERT ON SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR DECEMBER 4.

Interesting Details of the Discovery of the Book of the Lord While Searching in the Temple for Silver.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for Decem ber 4-"The Book of the Low Found," ii. Kings xxii.8-20. By J. E. Gilbert, D. D., L.L. D., secretary of the American Society of Religious Education. CONTEXT. Manasseh, of whom studied November 20, was succeeded on the throne of Judah by his son Amon, who ruled two years and did evil in the sight if the Lord (ii Kings xxi:19-22. In that brief time he perverted the people and corrupted the sanctuary. Nothing else is re-corded of him save that he was smin by his servants and that his son, Josiah. reigned in his stend. Josiah was only 8 years of age at the death of his father, but, fortunately for the government, he was surrounded by plous men who re-stored the worship of Jehovan. After ten years of comparative quiet the young king, being old enough to judge for himself (verse 3), adopted measures for repairing the temple which had been neglected in his father's time, and he sent Shaphan, the cribe, to Hilkiah, the high priest, with instructions to gather up the silver in the temple and to make regular payment to the laborers (verses 4 to 6). DISCOVERY. While searching in the Ume of Joash (ii Chron, xxiv:5), Hilkiah found a copy of the book of the Lord (verse 8). Some claim that this book was merely the code of laws written by Moses for the government of Israel, walle others think that it was our Pentateuch, precisely as we have it, but substantially the same, written in Hebrew, placed at first in the side of the ark (Deut. xxxi: 24-26). It must have been a venerable work else the high priest would not have esteemed it so highly, neither would be have mentioned the fact to Shaphan, as he did, is a matter of great importance. inding irdicated that Hilkiah had entered nto the king's spirit of reform, that he had inaugurated a careful examination and cleansing for the purpose of putting things in order, a general house cleaning prob-ably, as preliminary to the stated religious temple for the silver, which may have been part of the money gathered up in the ably, as preliminary to the stated religious services.

REPORT, Shaphan hastened to his sovereign with the good news, it was highly proper that he should first of all report that the silver had been found and had been appropriated according to the king's direction/verse 9, as that was the special matter with which he was charged. But, that done, the scribe told the king of Hilklah's discovery and produced the book and began to read (verse 10). It must have required several sittings to complete this task, even though only the statutes, as we have them in Exodus and Leviticus, were read. And, as the officer proceeded, the words that fell from his lips, like the voice of God out of the heaven, constituted a new revelation to the young monarch, Strainge words they were, long neglected, but highly important. Both hearer and reader were aroused to despest interest.

CONCERN. The Jews held their sucred books in the highest esteem. They believed that the writers were inspired, so that what was written they received as coming directly from God. There might be questions and doubts on all matters of mere human opinion, but every utterance of Scripture was held by the plous Jews to be directly from God. There might be questions and doubts on all matters of mere human opinion, but every utterance of Scripture was held by the plous Jews to be authoritative and final. Hilkiah and Shaphan felt this, as also did Josiah. The king perceived that the nation had departed a long way from the requirements of the law. Many things enjoined were neglected or perverted. This was true in both civil and religious affairs. The acts of devotion were formally Jewish but measurably heathen, while the affairs of state were conducted partly in harmony with the Mosaic code and partly after the fancies of kings. To a man who had undertaken reforms this state of things was highly distressing. As the reading ceased the king arose and rent his garments in token of his sorrow and concern (verse II), a customs employed by Orientalists (Ezra ix: 3) from very carly times (Job i:20).

ORDERS. Greatly agitated in spirit because the nation had departed from God. Josiah issued commands to learn the Lord's will. He knew that Judgment impended. He did not know how or how soon the stroke might fall. If possible he would sons are not mentioned elsewhere—they come into history at this time and attempt a delicate task at a critical period in the nation's life. It must have been an influential commission, one worthy the mission. That Hilkiah and Shaphan were in the party is proof that the king deemed the work to be done by them one of great moment, and dignity. the work to be done by them one of great moment and dignity.

INQUIRY. Where will this commission go to learn the mind of the Lord? There was a time when the Lord sent angels to communicate with mortals and tell them what otherwise they could not know, as when the cities of the plain were destroyed (Gen. XVII). On other occasions discloswhat otherwise they could not know, as when the cities of the piain were destroyed (Gen. xlx.i). On other occasions disclosures were made in visions (Isa. yi.7). Sometimes men received direct answers to their prayers (Ex. xvii:4-5). There was yet another method, the "Irim and Thummin," connected with the functions of the high priest, which passed with other pontificalia from Aaron downward (Ex. xxvii:20). The commissioners did not employ any of these modes—they went unto Huldah (verse 14), the wife of Shallum, whose grandfather was an attache of the temple, the keeper of the priest's wardrobe. This woman was a prophetess. God had laid His spirit upon her as upon Mirtam(Ex. xv:21), and Deborah (Judges iv:3), and Anna (Luke ii:35). Huldah must have sustained some reputation for some time or these men would not have turned to her for the desired information.

PREDICTION. Huldah was not troubled.

PREDICTION. Huldah was not troubled PREDICTION. Huldah was not troubled to find an answer. There is no evidence that she prayed, that she needed to wait for reflection, or that she had any special disclosure. She may have had full knowledge of the case for some time before the inquiry was made, waiting to speak when asked. But she delivers her reply with great firmness and precision, as if she were the mouthpiece of God, declaring "Thus saith the Lord" (verse for Them followed a startling prediction, that according to the words of the discovered book evil should be brought upon Jerusalem and its inhabitants. Because idolatrous worship had been offered there, the wrath of Jehovah had been kindled and it should not be quenched (Dent xxix:25-27). It was the same bold declaration made again and again by prophets through all the centuries (Dan, ix:11). The woman was made the agent of delivering heaven's message with as much fidelity and with the same smitt as men. There ing heaven's message with as much fidelity and with the same spirit as men. There was peculiar frankness in her words when she directed the commissioners to report to and with the same spirit as men. There was peculiar frankness in her words when she directed the commissioners to report to the king.

PROMISE. Huldah's words were not wholly a matediction. She had received and she delivered a benediction. The Lord does not treat all men allke. The righteous sha, not suffer with the wicked (Gen. xviii:23). Evil shall slay the one but mercy shall preserve the other—this great doctrine is recorded in concrete and abstract on every page of history, both sacred and profane (Ps. xxxiv:21-22). After the prediction of national disaster Huldah sent to Josiah God's promise of personal care and protection. That promise rested on the fact that the king was penitent (verse 19) another instance of Divine forbearance, illustrating His method of grace. In order to keep this promise concerning the king it was followed by another, a promise to delay the punishment already predicted until Josiah's death, that he might reign in peace and be gathered to his fathers without trouble (verse 29). Here a single man stands between an offended God and an offending nation (I. Kings xi.12), and becomes for the time being a savior.

CONCLUSION. The book of God is the CONCLUSION. The book of God is the central object in this lesson. When it was lost the muton went astray. When it was found, read and interpreted men trembled on account of sin, repented and found mercy. What light breaks out of the word to disclose man's condition! What darkness estitles down upon the people when the revealed word is obscured or neglecte! What was true in Judah is always true. That hand is most to be pitied where the Bible is not. That land is most to be praised where the Bible is not. That land is most to be p me being a savior, CONCLUSION. The book of God is the ostmaster Scott Has the Best Wishes of All in Effort to Secure Better Mail Facilities.

It is refreshing to observe that Posteaster Scott is in Washington trying to aringe decent postoffice facilities for Kansas City. In such efforts he has the best wishes of all, as all are concerned in mail facilities. Mr. Scott has with him some recommendations relating to inefficient clerks. He does not recommend their re-tention in office. For the good of the servtention in office. For the good of the service he does recommend that certain worth-less time servers be removed from the gov-ernment pay roit. It usually happens that a worthless civil service cierk has a full line of creditors. These creditors usually constitute the strong recommendation for retention in office. The only chance they see to get their money is for the worthless clerk to continue to draw pay from the government.

government, All this, however, makes a shabby postal service and places business men at a dis-advantage when compared with those do-ing business in cities having a decent mall service.

It is hoped by Mr. Scott that the drone It is hoped by Mr. Scatt that the drones may be ousted and money secured to be applied to raising the pay of efficient clerks besides getting others competent to handle business. This done the Kansas City of ice, which is known to the department as least efficient of all of its class, may be brought up to a standard demanded by the commercial interests of the city.

The business men of Kansas City are very much interested in the visit of Postmaster Scott to Washington. Mail that reached the Union depot at 7 a. m. shows stamp of having been handled at the post-office two hours later and it was 11:30 before delivered three blocks from the postoffice. This is but one sample of the service in Kansas City, U.S. A. and is not in tune with the motto about making Kansas City Kansas City, U.S. A., and is not be tune with the motto about making Kansas City a good place to do business in
